Eisenhower, a WWII legend, feared that deepening the relationships between government officials, lawmakers, and weapons producers would ultimately undermine democracy. The president's fears were not new, but Ledbetter makes a convincing case that the 1957 launch of Sputnik by the Soviets cemented the unholy alliance—long before the phrase became popular in the Vietnam era.

Eisenhower's farewell address was the final public speech of Dwight D. Eisenhower as the 34th President of the United States, delivered in a television broadcast on January 17, 1961. Perhaps best known for advocating that the nation guard against the potential influence of the military-industrial complex, a term he is credited with coining, the speech also expressed concerns about planning for the future and the dangers of massive spending, especially deficit spending, the prospect of the ...

Eisenhower's farewell address - Wikipedia

James Ledbetter's compelling "Unwarranted Influence" tells the tale of the military-industrial complex, a theory that had gestated long before Eisenhower's landmark speech on the subject. While the subject may at first blush seem difficult for the average reader to grasp, Ledbetter's great facility with words and ideas makes it just the opposite.
